

HUMAN VALUES

The improvement of one's knowledge, status or character with our efforts.

Human beings have some sort of values attached to them like the way all entities living on this earth pursue. The difference here which persists is that these values are called by different nomenclatures. For example, it can be human ethical and moral values. Out of these three, human values are very essential. These values reside within each individual and the same is reflected by the individual's character. Formally, these are expressed in various laws, declarations, debates, meetings, conventions etc. thereby protecting and encouraging human rights. The first and important step taken by many countries around the globe has been the recognition of these human values universally and encouraging the implementation of these values in practical ways. The immediate aim of all these efforts is to integrate every human being physically as well as psychologically and the ultimate goal is to inculcate positive attitude, thinking, and behavior and utilize these universal human values as the basis of developing cordial human relationships, in the spirit of mutual respect of those values. Therefore, human values are those inspiring factors that encourage us to utilize our moral values, particularly in the situation of conflict, so that we avoid our negative attitude when dealing with confrontational situations.
